

A Film Review: Mr Bean's Holiday

2E Tai Ka Lee

I have just watched 'Mr. Bean's Holiday'. It is a comedy. I like comedies very much because they help me relax. Rowan Atkinson is the leading actor. He plays Mr. Bean in the film. The director of the film is Steve Bendelack, who is good at making comedies. In the film, Mr. Bean's facial expression and body language are the most attractive parts. They are so entertaining.

At the beginning of the movie, Mr. Bean wins the first prize in a church raffle. He can now go on a trip to the French Riviera. During the journey, he meets a director and his son, Stephan, who are on their way to the Cannes Film Festival. Mr. Bean asks the director to help him take a video. When the director finishes recording, Mr. Bean gets on the train and the train departs. The director's son is on the train, too, but, unfortunately, the director gets separated from his son. So Mr. Bean helps Stephan to find his father. On the way to Cannes, lots of interesting things happen and they also meet a film star, Sabine, who joins their adventure.

In general, I would give 3 stars to this film because the film has a clear theme and I couldn't stop laughing. It is a successful comedy especially where Mr. Bean has no idea about how he can consume the seafood platter in the restaurant. He eats in a strange but funny way and also pours some seafood into a lady's bag. This is the fantastic scene in the film. My favourite character is Mr. Bean. He is the most entertaining person: he is humorous, too. He doesn't mind doing some silly things in the film. I think making others happy is his target. He is professional. Besides all this, his facial expression and body language are brilliant.

Overall, I like this film very much so I would recommend it to my friends. I recommend it not just because it is entertaining but also because it gives us the message that we should lead a happy life. Don't give yourself too much pressure. It's important to live a happy life.
